

Forbes

The 10 Coolest Places to Go in 2019

Ann Abel Senior Contributor

The world keeps getting bigger. Every traveler I know says their wish list grows longer, not shorter, every time they dip into a new region or even hear about one.

So how to decide? What's newly (or still) safe or newly uncovered? What's hovering between charming sleepiness and overdeveloped soullessness? What must we see before it changes forever? What will transform us?

I put those questions to experts at several high-end travel companies. These super-agents know what they're talking about, keeping their ears on their clients' interests and their eyes on the adventures they themselves have in every corner of the world. Here (in alphabetical order) is what on their radar for next year.

Cabo/Los Cabos, Mexico

This longtime weekend escape for Los Angelenos is no stranger to luxury resorts, with dozens of five-star properties, including the new Montage Los Cabos and Solaz, a Luxury Collection Resort, Los Cabos," says Biggs Bradley. "But over the next two years, the destination will welcome new properties, including the Nobu Hotel and the 1 Hotel, that will secure its place on the luxury travelers' map.

Perhaps the two most exciting openings are the Four Seasons Costa Palmas, which recently welcomed Gwyneth Paltrow and her friends, and Amanvari, set to debut in 2020."

Click here for online article.